The signs and symptoms of gum disease are often mild and may go unnoticed until the damage is extensive. In severe cases, gum disease can result in the loosening or loss of teeth. If you experience symptoms of gum disease, it’s important to seek professional treatment. Here I’ll explain the most common symptoms of gum disease to look out for.

<th>Tender or bleeding gums</th>

<tr>
<td>Persistent bad breath which does not go away may be a sign of gum disease. However, it may also be linked to other causes such as diet, smoking or throat and nasal infections.</td>
<td>Red and swollen gums are usually a sign that the tissues surrounding the teeth are not healthy. Healthy gums should be pink and firm.</td>
<td>Tender gums or gums that bleed (e.g. during tooth cleaning) are also common symptoms of gum disease. If you regularly notice blood whilst cleaning your teeth, you should seek professional treatment from a dentist or hygienist.</td>

<th>Loose or shifting teeth</th>
<th>Increased sensitivity</th>
<th>Gum recession</th>
</tr>

<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Gum disease may cause loss of bone around the teeth. This may lead to loose or shifting teeth. If this happens, seek professional treatment from your dentist.</td>
<td>If you have sensitivity around your teeth and gums, it may be because the root of a tooth is more exposed. This could be due to either gum recession or the development of a periodontal (gum) pocket. It may be harmless but should be checked by your dentist.</td>
<td>The gums can recede (pull away from the teeth) due to inflammation or wear over time. Receding gums expose the roots of teeth to decay and infection, which may lead to increased sensitivity.</td>

When should I seek help?

If you experience any of the symptoms above, it’s important that you seek professional advice from your dentist. Even if you don’t notice any obvious problems, it’s important to attend regular dental checks as they will include a thorough examination of the gums and supporting tissues.

Can’t get an appointment with your usual dentist? You can use a Bupa Dental Care dentist even if you’re not usually their patient.
